stands unharmed. A few pieces only were detached and fell.

A gun has been invented in France, in which electricity is very ingeniously applied to the igni-tion of the charge. Two small electric batteries are enclosed in the stock, the conducting wires of shich emerge at the surface, near the breech, and by a very simple means are connected, at pleasure with a fine platicum wire within the charge, so as with a fine plaintum were within the enarge, so as to render it incandescent, and thus ignite the powder. CHARLESTON. THURSDAY MORNING, APRIL 11, 1867.

Our readers not unfrequently see reference ritualism and the ritualistic movement. Many of them are doubtless informed on th subject. There may be others, however, whose dens are very much confused, and to whom a brief and succinct statement of the controvers may not be unwelcome. This ecclesiastical revolution, which seems to be near its culminaion, may be said to have had its origin some astances before that period of very high church clergymen, who indulged in "Anglican" eccentricities, and some who exchanged the English for the Roman Church; but there was nothing like a general movement. In 1842 or 1843 appeared the "Tracts for the Times," which created considerable excitement and dis cussion during the few years following, till more important public events made it pass into comparative oblivion. The party lines, however, within the church from that day on, have een clearly drawn. But within the last year or two, there have been indications of further divisions. High and low church no longer suffice to embrace all the children of the church. There are many who were "high church" in other days, but are now unwilling to go the length of the Ritualists. There are therefore, three parties now, which, however, we presume, will soon coalesce again into two These parties differ from others that have been engaged in a contest of opinion in this that the progressionists at the same time represent the enctionary element. In other words, they progress backward. The Ritualists, if we can rely on the accor that reach us through our English exchanges, are gaining strength, and with this growth in ractised which were almost undreamt of in 1843, or even in 1851, and the novelties of external worship are justified by the assertion o principles which in those days had not been discovered, or at least found no champion bold mough to maintain them. The Ritualists of to-day have made the discovery that it is possible to shake off the bondage of Protestantism and yet remain in the English Church; and that those who do so are its only true and con sistent members.

Twenty-five years ago, in England, and fifty rears ago in Germany, there had been spas nodic attempts to revive various external rites, but they fell through. They owed their origin to the same morbid love of the sensuous which gave birth to Romanticism in liter-Time has almost effaced their ature. memory in literature, and in theology we had fair hopes of seeing a similar result, when this present romantic revival has produced marked change of the phase of the question. There is considerable difference, in other re pects also, between the controversy as it stood hen, and as it presents itself to us now. It is phenomenon which has to be dealt with now says Dr. Littlebale, in "The Church and the World," is that ceremonial observances everywhere in England to-day co-exist with active parochial and missionary work, and are regarded by practical men perfectly free from effeminate sentimentalism, as important adjuncts in their labors. Tractarianism, it is said, was only a religion for gentlemen; but it has now taken a shape which will enable it to wrest the middle classes surplus. It is proper that stockholders should be apprized of this decision that they may include their proportion of the amount thus paid by the Banks for them in their estimate of the deduction to which they are entitled in making their statement of taxable income.

Award the fraude of the deduction neglected altogether, or approached in a manner of taxable income. and is now fast becoming democratic. Argument cannot avail against such a party. They have been taunted with the histrionic charac ter of their ceremonial. Dr. LITTERDALE

quoted above, says in reply, "It is an axion

n liturgiology that no public worship is really deserving of the name unless it be histrionic The Ritualists, already claim to be the argest party in the church, and to be still on the increase. In the London Quarterly for Jan uary we find much information on this subject As a mark of its progress, the reviewer refere to the "Directorium" Anglicanum," first published in 1857, edited by Rev. J. Purchas. The second edition, under the care of Dr. LEE was published in 1865. The illustrations of the first and second editions (for each has a set of prints different from the other) are significant as to the development which Ritualism had un dergone during the interval of seven or eight years. Thus, whereas the original from spreed represents some early stage in the celebration of the Eucharist, the frontispiece of the second edition displays the elevation of the chalice, which, in the meantime, had been added to the stock of ceremonies. In the first edition there are two candles on the altar and two at the sides; but in the second edition there are eigh additional candles and four pots of flowers, or what, we think, is called the super-altar * * * The 'acolyte,' from a tall young man carrying a flagon, has dwindled down to a little boy with a girdle roun his waist, and armed with a censer. In 1857 the altar was surmounted by an ornaments cross; in the edition of 1665 this has been superseded by a crucifix."

"Dr. PERRY, in the "Church and the World." enumerates the following as the five prominen points of the Charter of an Englishman's Ritualistic liberties. 1. The ancient vestment of the bishops and other clergy; 2. the two lights on the altar; 3. the incense; 4. the mixed chalice; and 5. the eastward position is front of the altar, of the priest and his assist ants at the celebration of the Holy Communion. Another author adds three additional points 6. the use of wafer bread; 7. the presence of the 'faithful' for what is styled 'spiritual ommunion;' and 8th, the elevation of the conecrated elements. These several points are now all in court. The opinions of eminent counsel have been taken, and they vary in their leanings, influ enced largely, no doubt, by preconceived opinion. The weight of authority, however, eems to be against the Ritualists; and they nust either relinquish these tenets or their enefices. They say they will do neither, and confidently assert that ere long public opinion and the law-making power will be with them.
